My ambition is limitless – Lerena

AIMING HIGH: Kevin Lerena will be involved in a heavyweight bout in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia. Picture: VELI NHLAPO undefeated prospect from Australia who has eight wins from as many fights.

Their fight will form part of the event that will be headlined by the eagerly awaited heavyweight clash between Englishman Joshua and Ngannou, a mixed-martial arts star from Cameroon who is based in France.

Chinese Zhilei Zhang will face Kiwi Joseph Parker for the WBO interim heavyweight belt as the co-main event.

Saudi Arabia is steadily becoming home for super bouts and boxers are getting paid huge purse monies.

Ngannou, who was trained by Mike Tyson, earned $10m (about R190m) for the fight he lost by a split points decision to Tyson Fury in Saudi Arabia in October last year. Fury, the current WBC heavyweight world champ, walked away with $50m (R947m).

Ngannou's manager Marquel was quoted as saying his charge would make over $10m (R189m) while Joshua's purse money is estimated around £31m (R745m). Lerena would, however, not divulge his purse money.

Lerena will instead be involved in a heavyweight bout at Kingdom Arena in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, on Friday night.

"I will be fighting between the two weight divisions," said Lerena, who is already in Saudi Arabia with his trainer Peter Smith.

"It's about getting the biggest fights, no matter the division. My ambition is limitless. I just want to keep going and achieve as much as I can with the time I've got.

"How much time I have, I don't know and I don't even think about the end of the road but achieving in the time I've got. That means more championships, bigger fights and lucrative paydays ... but I want to keep achieving and doing well for my legacy."

In his failed attempt to win the WBA heavyweight belt against Daniel Dubois in 2022, Lerena earned R7m.

"It's about fighting on the biggest world boxing card in the world," he said in reference to Friday night show, which pits vastly experienced former WBA (Super), IBF, WBO and IBO heavyweight champion Anthony Joshua and Francis Ngannou, who is a novice of only one boxing match.

In Riyadh, Lerena will face an

FIA chief faces allegation of interference at 2023 Saudi Grand Prix

ALAN BALDWIN

The head of Formula One's governing body, Mohammed Ben Sulayem, is under investigation for allegedly interfering in the outcome of the 2023 Saudi Arabian Grand Prix, the BBC reported.

A spokesperson for the Paris-based International Automobile Federation (FIA), asked for a comment on the report, could not confirm any details but said "the matter is being discussed internally." Ben Sulayem, an Emirati, could not be reached immediately for comment.

The BBC said it had seen a report by FIA compliance officer Paolo Basarri to its ethics committee in which a whistleblower claimed the president had intervened to overturn a penalty given to Aston Martin's Fernando Alonso.

It alleged that Ben Sulayem called Sheikh Abdullah bin Hamad bin Isa Al Khalifa, the FIA's vice-president for sport for the Middle East and North Africa who was in an official capacity at the race.

Double world champion Alonso was handed back the 100th podium of his Formula One career after a U-turn by officials hours after the finish in Jeddah on March 19 2023.

The 41-year-old Spaniard had finished third but was demoted to fourth by a 10-second post-race penalty for failing to serve properly a five-second penalty for an error in placing his car on the starting grid. Stewards found the rear jack was in contact with the car before the five seconds were up.

The second penalty imposed more than 30 laps after his pit stop, was then reversed when his team won a right to review after presenting new evidence to support their case.

The new evidence included the minutes of a Sporting Advisory Committee meeting and video of "seven different instances where cars were touched by the jack while serving a similar penalty ... without being penalised."

● A Ferrari Testarossa sports car stolen from Austrian Formula One driver Gerhard Berger during the 1995 San Marino Grand Prix weekend has been recovered by London police almost 29 years later.

The Metropolitan Police said on Monday the red F512M, worth some £350,000 (R8.4m), was tracked down four days after Ferrari reported it was the one being sold through a British broker to a US buyer.

Police enquiries found it was shipped to Japan shortly after being stolen from the Italian city of Imola and then arrived in Britain in late 2023.

The organised vehicle crime unit said enquiries were ongoing and no arrests had been made.

A second silver Ferrari F355 that belonged to Berger's French former teammate Jean Alesi, which was stolen on the same weekend in the Italian city, remains missing.

Alesi finished second in the race won by Williams' Damon Hill with Berger third, in the Ferrari drivers' final season at the Italian team before the arrival of Michael Schumacher and Eddie Irvine.

Berger had caught the thief in the act of stealing his car but after jumping clear and then giving chase in a friend's Volkswagen Golf, according to a news report at the time, was unable to prevent it from getting away. — Reuters

WBC bridgeweight interim champion to fight in Saudi Arabia

BONGANI MAGASELA

World Boxing Council (WBC) bridgeweight interim boxing champion Kevin 'Two Guns' Lerena says his main objective about his involvement in the fistic sport is to make money, provide for his family and continue with his legacy.

The former horse-racing champion jockey was responding to a question about his real intention because the expectation is that he will pay attention in the bridgeweight where he is at the doorstep of fighting for the actual title.
