INTRODUCTION

1. PURPOSE AND BACKGROUND

1.1. PURPOSE

To explore and measure the impact of legislation, policy and practice in relation to Equal Pay/Remuneration for Work of Equal Value whilst also exploring its application and dispute resolution.

1.2. BACKGROUND

1.2.1. International and Regional instruments on equal pay

Discrimination and inequality had also been a global challenge for years exceeding a century to date. Internationally there had been efforts directed at ensuring social justice for workers, which include discrimination in general and pay inequality in particular, championed by the United Nations' (UN) agencies like the International Labour Organization (ILO). These institutions coordinated the adoption of several standards for this purpose.

Discrimination is unethical and inhumane as it deprives people in many ways, the UN committed to address it, starting with the establishment of the ILO to deal with ethical, humane working conditions and social justice as written in the preamble of its Constitution: "universal and lasting peace can be established only if it is based on social justice." (ILO, 1919). Furthermore, in 1944, the ILO adopted a Declaration commonly known as the Declaration of Philadelphia, which affirms that "all human beings, irrespective of race, creed or sex, have the right to pursue both their material well-being and their spiritual development in conditions of freedom and dignity, of economic security and equal opportunity." (ILO, 1944 - Declaration of Philadelphia). This Declaration was part of the ILO's Constitution.

The United Nations further showed commitment to fight injustices of discrimination and inequality by adopting the Universal Declaration for Human Rights (UDHR) in 1949, which all humanity has to observe and respect globally. While the UDHR calls to address various human rights, it covered the rights of workers and labour relation in its various articles. Specifically, the rights of workers to pay equality are clearly outlined in Article 23, which recognizes the significant right that every worker is entitled to in terms of earning living wages that are fairly equal and free from discrimination as follows:

▪ “Article 23-

1. Everyone, without any discrimination, has the right to equal pay for equal work.
2. Everyone who works has the right to just and favourable remuneration ensuring for himself and his family an existence worthy of human dignity, and supplemented, if necessary, by other means of social protection.” (UN, 1949, Article 23).

The UDHR only elevated the already pronounced fundamental right of workers that the ILO had already started to champion for in its founding Constitution. The principle of Equal Pay for Work of Equal Value cannot be more emphasized as the ILO ensured through its many instruments/standards (Conventions and Recommendations). The ILO Instruments go as far back as 1951 and 1958 when the most fundamental instruments were adopted, viz the Equal Remuneration Convention (No.100) of 1951 and Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention (No.111) of 1958, both of which ratified by South Africa in the years 2000 and 1997 respectively. These were followed by the adoption of Social Policy Convention (No. 117) of 1962. These instruments aimed to promote equality in more or less complementary ways as follows:

✓ Equal Remuneration Convention (No.100) of 1951:

Oelz, Olney & Tomei (2013) described Equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value as a principle that is designed to achieve pay equity between men and women.

To them, Pay equity is about fairness in pay. While Equal Remuneration Convention promotes the implementation of equal remuneration, it also requires member States to promote and ensure the application to all workers, of the principle of equal remuneration for men and women workers for work of equal value. By 2013, around 90% of the ILO member states had ratified this Convention, Oelz et al (2013).

✓ Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention (No.111) of 1958:

The purpose of the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention (No. 111) of 1958 is to protect all persons against discrimination at work. The Convention protects not only those who have already found employment or exercise an occupation, but also those who are preparing to work, seeking work, or risk losing their work. It covers all jobs and occupations in the public and private sectors. This instrument works in tandem with the other discrimination and equality instruments like the Convention 100 on equal pay.

✓ Social Policy Convention (No. 117) of 1962:

Through its Article 14, the Social Policy Convention further advances commitment to abolish all discrimination amongst workers on grounds of race, colour, sex, belief, tribal association or trade union affiliation in respect of “wage rates. All these shall be fixed according to the principle of equal pay for work of equal value in the same operation and undertaking”. (ILO. 1962- Social Policy Convention).

Furthermore, implementation of measures to facilitate the abolition of discrimination, particularly wage discrimination, was enhanced in 1981 by the adoption of the Organization of African Unity African’s Charter on Human and People’s rights. The Charter made it clear in Article 15 that, “Every individual shall have the right to work under equitable and satisfactory conditions, and shall receive equal pay for work. (Organization of African Unity, 1981 – African Charter on Human and People’s Rights).

Achieving discrimination and inequality in the workplace had been on the centre stage and attracting more attention in South Africa since the dawn of democracy, also resulting in several pieces of legislation enacted to address these problems from different perspectives. For almost 25 years (since Employment Equity Act of 1998 was passed), the country had been in the trajectory of reversing the imbalance caused by apartheid in the workplace.

All the measures taken by different role players above were aimed at abolishing and preventing discrimination through unequal pay. However, progress is sluggish.

1.2.2.South African Legal Framework on discrimination in general and pay discrimination in particular

As a player in the global space, South Africa participates in multinational bodies that play a role in advancing human rights, dignity and freedom. These bodies adopted standards aimed at ensuring and protecting human rights. Because of being a member of the United Nations and the International Labour Organization, South Africa Ratified several Conventions aimed at advancing human right and equality. These influenced its legislation in many ways as seen in the country being commended for having one of the best-crafted Constitutions in the world.

Regarding South Africa's measures to abolish discrimination in general and pay inequality in particular, the supreme law of the country, the South African Constitution passed in 1996 focusing on denouncing discrimination and workplace inequality in Sections 9 and 23 respectively. Chapter of Two (Bill of Rights) of the Constitution laid a foundation to put measures through law, to abolish discrimination. The Bill of rights listed all fundamental human rights that need to be observed, including the rights to equality and labour relations.

Several other pieces of the legislation took further the matters of discrimination and equality to cement the commitment for country implementation measures. These include the Employment Equity Act No.55 of 1998, which in Chapter II focuses on elimination of unfair discrimination in employment policies and practices. The Employment Equity Amendment Act (No.47) passed in 2013, in particular, sections 6(4) and 6(5) focused on the prohibition of unfair discrimination in relation to differences in terms and conditions of employment between employees of the same employer performing the same or substantially the same work or work of equal value that is directly or indirectly based on any one or more of the grounds listed in section 6(1) of the EEA.

In an effort to ensure that Pay Equality is also achieved in the country, South Africa further passed Employment Equity Regulations in 2014, followed by the Code of Good Practice on Equal Pay/Remuneration for Work of Equal Value, which was passed in 2015. The Code of Good Practice aims to assist in the promotion and practical implementation of the Equal Pay Principle that is embedded in the EEA.

The South African government also enacted the Promotion of Equality and Prevention of Unfair Discrimination Act (No. 4) of 2000 (PEPUDA) in the midst of policy measures developed within the Employment Equity Act. This piece of legislation (PEPUDA) was aimed at facilitating the transition from apartheid era, which treated people differently based on many attributes that make people differ from each other, e.g. race, gender, creed, disability etc. PEPUDA specifically aims to ensure transformation under the guidance of the principle of equality, fairness, equity, freedom amongst other principles.

Besides all these measures put in place in making sure that discrimination is denounced, prohibited and abolished where it exists, pay inequalities persist relentlessly. This necessitated the need to continue putting these matters at the centre of national policy. The reality however, is that discrimination and inequality continues to occur and create a cause for concern.

Even though the main causes of inequality and discrimination are generally known, having put in place all measures and efforts to level the field in terms of interventions like educational level, field of study, work experience, skills, qualifications, seniority, size of the company and sectors of employment, discrimination and inequality continue to take place. Amongst main causes, race and gender discrimination is found to be the main contributing factors to pay inequality. Other causes are mainly due to stereotypes and prejudices with regard to work undertaken by women. Due to a high concentration of women in flexible work, which includes part-time work or temporary work, women find themselves in poorly paid jobs and undervalued jobs, thus making them more vulnerable to pay inequality. Equal pay/remuneration for work of equal value is a good principle that can contribute to poverty reduction and therefore there are more benefits in abolishing and preventing discrimination.

1.2.3. Problem Statement

Despite having ratified the relevant conventions (Convention 100, Convention 111) and Recommendation 90, discrimination on pay inequality continues to be relentless. Besides the promulgation of the different pieces of legislation in the Country to eradicate discrimination and pay/remuneration inequality, such as the Country's Constitution, the EEA, the PEPUDA as well as Amendments of the Employment Equity Act, enacting the Employment Regulations and subsequently passing the Code of Good Practice on Equal pay/Remuneration, pay/remuneration inequality persists.

2. SCOPE OF BID

Through this terms of reference, the Department is inviting a service provider with labour market research experience for conducting research on the "Assessment of the impact, practice and application of Equal Pay/Remuneration for Work of Equal Value" for a period of twelve (12) months.

2.1. SCOPE OF WORK

2.1.1. Broadly, the study should focus on:

- a) Assessing progress made since enacting Amendments to the Employment Equity Act of 2013 (EEA), Regulations 2 to 7 of 2014 and Code of Good practice on Equal Pay/Remuneration.
- b) Assessing impact of the dispute resolutions in terms of the amendment Employment Equity Act of 2013 (EEA), Regulations 2 to 7 of 2014 and Code of Good practice on Equal Pay/Remuneration.
- c) Challenges related to practical implementation and experience thereof (e.g. in ensuring objective and transparent Job Evaluation processes and pay grading systems); existence of remuneration and benefit policies and practices/ procedures; existence of Remuneration/ pay committees/ Boards; existence of transparency & disclosure of remuneration/ pay and benefits in contracts of employment prohibiting employees to share such information/ payslips; do companies conduct pay and benefits audits if any and the frequency of these pay audits; and are the Affirmative Action (AA) measures to address pay inequalities included in the EE Plan of designated employers.

2.1.2. Some of the specific questions are:

- ✓ What is the impact of EE legislation, regulations and policies to ensure the principle of equal pay/remuneration for work of equal value?
- ✓ What are measures taken to implement the principle- are the equal pay provisions in the EEA, EE Regulations and the Equal Pay Code adequate and effective?
- ✓ What are challenges faced by employers, workers and institutions expected to set wages- in relation to equal pay/remuneration for work of equal value?
- ✓ What are the experiences observed and the lessons learnt in implementing the principle, including dispute resolution?

2.1.3. Significance of the study:

The impact of the EEA especially on pay equality would be achieved if a better understanding of the challenges preventing the implementation of the principles of equal pay/remuneration for work of equal value are established and addressed. Articles in the Commission for Employment Equity (CEE) reports show that a number of workers lose equal pay/remuneration cases when disputes are referred to the CCMA and the labour courts, particularly on arbitrary grounds.

2.1.4. Deliverables:

- Proposal and project plan for conducting the study.
- Research methodology (approach).
- Research instruments (Questionnaires or Interview guide).
- A draft report on research findings and recommendations to strengthen the implementation of Equal Pay/Remuneration for work of equal value in South Africa.
- A final report on research findings and recommendations to strengthen the implementation of Equal Pay/Remuneration for work of equal value in South Africa.
- Six progress meetings with the CEE/Department.
- A maximum of five presentations of the final report to the CEE/Department/ Stakeholders.
