Transnet reserves the right to withdraw an award, or cancel a contract concluded with a Tenderer should it be established, at any time, that a tenderer has been restricted with National Treasury by another government institution.

C3.1 Service Information

1. Introduction

Petrusburg Depot is a sub-depot reporting to Kimberley North Depot that only consists of Permanent Way (Perway) team. The Perway Team Maintains Bloemfontein line that stretches to 160 kilometres from Hamilton station to Alex Yard. Letsemeng Municipality supplies the depot with water, which is used for cleaning, bathroom and other domestic uses.

The depot is currently facing water supply challenges of water supply due to insufficient water pressure to pump the water towards the depot and houses near the depot as they are built at a higher level than other houses or buildings in Petrusburg. The water pipelines are also damaged, and maintenance is a challenge due unavailability of water pipeline layouts. Another challenge the municipality is having is, lack of resources which include finances and manpower to do maintenance according to frequency standard.

The municipality currently supplies water to the depot and surrounding households through water-trucks. Storage tanks have been installed at these locations and are refilled on a weekly basis. However, this approach serves only as a temporary measure to address the ongoing water supply challenges faced by the depot.

Kimberley North Depot management has taken an initiative to install a borehole as a permanent solution. This is due to the fact the municipality is not showing any promise on resolving the water crisis. The municipality did not have any solution to resolve the current issue, because before they can have a permanent solution, they have to identify the water system layout in Petrusburg, challenges with maintenance team and insufficient resources. This initiative is bringing dependence and not rely on municipality.

2. Petrusburg Town And Depot Overview

3. Hydrogeological Study

A hydrogeological study is a critical prerequisite to borehole installation, as it will provide scientific and technical assurance that groundwater will be available, accessible, and sustainable for Petrusburg Depot. The study will assess the subsurface geological formations, identify potential aquifers, and determine groundwater flow characteristics, which will significantly reduce the risk of unsuccessful drilling.

By conducting the hydrogeological study, will assist in accurately determining optimal borehole location and drilling depth, ensuring that the borehole intersects productive water-bearing zones. This minimizes unnecessary drilling costs, avoids dry or low-yield boreholes, and improves the overall success rate of the project.

This study will also play an important role in protecting water quality. It evaluates potential contamination risks by considering proximity to sources such as septic tanks, fuel storage, and polluted surface water. Appropriate siting and design recommendations help safeguard the borehole against pollution and ensure compliance with environmental and health standards.

3.1. Desktop Study

The Study will include:

- Reviews geological maps.
- Groundwater databases.
- Previous borehole logs.
- Satellite imagery.
- Identifies potential aquifers.
- Groundwater flow patterns.

3.2. Geophysical Survey

Survey must include:

- Helps locate the best drilling point by mapping underground rock layers and water-bearing zones.

3.3. Site Assessment

Assessment should include:

- Evaluates land accessibility.
- Environmental sensitivity.
- Proximity to potential contamination sources.

3.4. Drilling and Pump Size Recommendation

Based on data collected, the hydrogeologist recommends:

- Exact drilling location.
- Expected depth.
- Estimated yield.
- Type of casing and borehole design.
- Pump size required

3.5. Regulatory Considerations

In many regions, especially for high-yield or commercial boreholes, a Water Use License or environmental approval will be needed.

4. Borehole Installation Process (After Geological Studies)

The borehole installation process at Petrusburg Depot begins after the successful completion of hydrogeological and geophysical studies, which confirm groundwater availability and determine the optimal drilling location. The recommended site is marked, and access and safety requirements are verified before mobilisation of the drilling equipment. It is preferable that the Borehole being within the depot yard to avoid possible vandalism and theft.

Drilling will be carried out to the target depth as advised by the hydrogeologist, with geological logging and monitoring of water strikes conducted throughout the process. Once drilling is completed, the borehole is constructed using appropriate casing and screen materials, and connected to the already available water piping system, followed by gravel packing and sealing to prevent contamination.

The borehole is then developed to improve water yield and clarity, and a pumping (yield) test is performed to determine the sustainable abstraction rate and suitable pump size. Based on the test results, a submersible pump is installed, completing the process and ensuring a reliable and long-term water supply solution for Petrusburg Depot.

4.1. Final Site Selection

After the hydrogeological and geophysical studies confirm groundwater availability:

- Mark the exact drilling point recommended by the hydrogeologist.
- Confirm accessibility for drilling rigs, water trucks, and support vehicles.

4.2. Mobilization of Drilling Equipment

The contractor brings:

- Drilling rig.
- Compressor and support truck.
- Casing pipes and drilling consumables.
- Water for drilling.
- A safety briefing and site setup are done.
- It is preferable that the borehole be installed inside the depot

4.3. Borehole Drilling

Typical steps:

- Drill to the expected target depth (based on the study).
- Record lithology logs — types of soil/rock encountered.
- Monitor airlift yield to estimate water availability.
- Drill continues until the hydrogeologist confirms sufficient water strike(s).

4.4. Borehole Construction (Casing & Screens)

Once drilling reaches the target depth:

- Install PVC or steel casing to prevent collapse.
- Install screen sections in the water-bearing zone.
- Insert gravel pack around the screen to prevent fine particles.
- Seal the upper section with bentonite or cement to protect against contamination.

4.5. Borehole Development

Purpose: remove fine sediments and improve water flow.

Methods include:

- Airlifting
- Surging
- Pump development

4.6. Pumping Test (Yield Test)

A mandatory step to understand borehole performance:

- Conduct a constant-rate test.
- Record drawdown and recovery data.
- Sustainable yield
- Recommended pump size
- Long-term abstraction rate

A pumping-test report must be submitted after the results

4.7. Pump Installation

The correct pump is selected based on the pumping test.

Includes:

- Submersible pump installation.
- Electrical cable and control box.
- Non-return valves.
- Borehole headworks and surface protection.

The pipes from the pump should be connected to the already existing tank.

5. The Awarded Contractor Should Note the Following:

- The contractor/service provider should include all material in their rates.
- The contractor/service provider will be responsible for all safety, environmental and quality compliance of the project which will be approved by Transnet representatives.
- The contractor/service provider is required to submit safety file and environmental file. Check lists will be provided, and the files must be compiled in accordance with the check lists.
- Contractor must provide a clear project schedule indicating all the activities starting and ending dates.
- The contractor will not be entitled to payment where groundwater is recommended or confirmed by their hydrogeological study, but drilling results indicate that no groundwater is present.*

PART 4: AFFECTED PROPERTY
