1.	Supplier would like to participate in the tender. However, under the Functional Evaluation requirements, it states that bidders must be either an OEM or an authorised distributor. Could you kindly advise whether the submission of a Letter of Support from either the OEM or an authorised distributor would be sufficient for us to be considered compliant and evaluated for this tender?	Please note that the functionality requirement does not restrict participation solely to OEMs. Bidders may also be authorised suppliers, distributors, or resellers of the OEM products being offered. To be evaluated against this requirement, bidders are required to submit evidence of their OEM authorisation as stipulated in the Functional Evaluation Criteria, namely: An OEM Accreditation Letter or Certificate issued on the OEM's official letterhead;	2026-07-28

		• The letter/certificate must clearly state the bidder's name and status (e.g. authorised distributor, reseller, partner, etc.); • The scope of products or services covered must be specified; • The accreditation must be valid at the time of tender submission; and • OEM contact details (name, email address, telephone number and website) must be provided for verification purposes. Accordingly, if you are not the OEM, a Letter of Support may be considered acceptable provided that it clearly confirms your authorised status to supply the OEM products and contains all the information required under the functionality criteria listed above. Bidders are encouraged to ensure that the supporting documentation submitted adequately demonstrates compliance with the OEM authorisation requirement, as this will form part of the functionality evaluation.
