1. PURPOSE

- 1.1. To appoint a service provider to assist the Department of Forestry, Fisheries and the Environment (DFFE) with the development of the Leopard Conservation Strategy for the conservation and management of leopards in South Africa; conduct a Situational Analysis that will inform and guide the development of a Biodiversity Management Plan (BMP); and the development of a draft BMP for leopards in South Africa for a period of twenty-four (24) months.

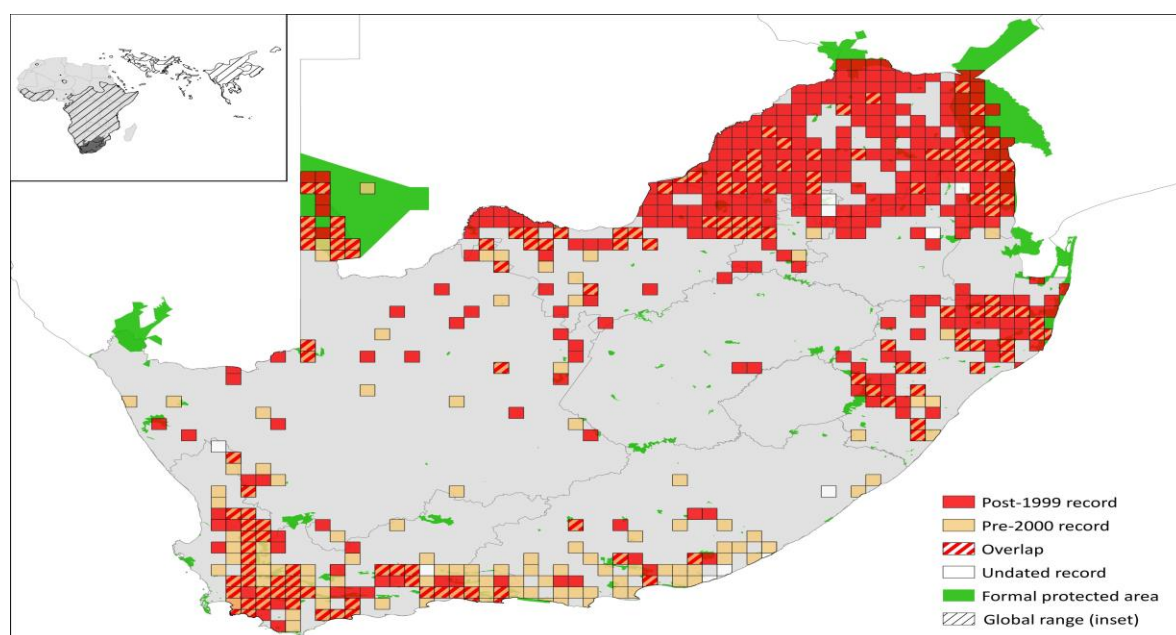

2. INTRODUCTION AND BACKGROUND

- 2.1. The Leopard (Panthera pardus) also known as Felis pardus is a genus within the family Felidae and it is a solitary, reclusive species of big cats. It is the most widespread, but patchily distributed species, its distribution extends across much of Africa, as well as Asia from the Middle East to the Pacific Ocean (Jacobson et al., 2016). The International Union for the Conservation of Nature (IUCN) recognizes nine subspecies (Miththapala, Seidensticker & O'Brien, 1996; Uphyrkina et al., 2001) of leopard as follows. Amur P. p. orientalis; Arabian - P. p. nimr, and Javan, P. p. melas; Persian, P. p. saxicolor and Sri Lankan P. p. kotiya; north Chinese (P. p. japonensis; Laguardia et al., 2015); Indochinese leopard (P. p. delacouri; Rostro-García et al., 2016). African (P. p. pardus) and Indian (P. p. fusca), (Henschel et al., 2008).
- 2.2. Leopard has the widest habitat tolerance amongst the big cats and the only species occupying both rainforest and desert habitats. Leopards are most abundant in woodland, grassland savanna and all forest types, but also occur widely in montane habitats, coastal scrub, shrubland, semi-desert and desert. Like most big cats, leopards are relatively poor dispersers and the degree of connectivity between populations, within and outside of South Africa, is unknown (Swanepoel et al., 2016). Although more resilient than many other large carnivores, leopards are still sensitive to human disturbance and have been eradicated from at least 37% of their historic African range (Ray et al., 2005).
- 2.3. According to Jacobson et al., 2016 leopards suffered a historic range loss 63–75% worldwide and 80% of its past range is in South Africa. As a result, it is currently classified as Vulnerable VU C1 - by the Regional Red List Status in accordance with the regional International Union for Conservation of Nature's (IUCN) Red List assessment conducted in 2016 (Swanepoel et al., 2016). Additionally, the leopard is globally red-listed as 'vulnerable' under criteria A2cd according to the recent IUCN Red List of Threatened Species which was conducted in 2015 and published in 2020. Furthermore, leopard is listed in Appendix I of the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora (CITES) an international agreement between governments. Its aim is to ensure that international trade in specimens of wild animals and plants does not threaten the survival of the species. Nationally, the Threatened or Protected Species (TOPS) list (2007) which is developed under the National Environmental Management; Biodiversity Act (Act 10 of 2004) classified leopard as vulnerable meaning it is facing an extremely high risk of extinction in the wild in the medium-term future.

- 2.4. Approximately 20% (248 770 km²) of land in SA provides a suitable habitat for leopards although much of this is highly fragmented due to agricultural development, human encroachment etc. that may lead to persecution of the species (Swanepoel et al. 2013). Suitable habitat is fragmented into four general regions as indicated in Figure 1 below: one stretching along the southeast coast, one occurring in the interior of KwaZulu-Natal, one encompassing the Kruger National Park and interior of Limpopo, and one in the northern region where the Kgalagadi Transfrontier National Park is located (Swanepoel, et al., 2013). While approximately thirty-two percent (32%) of the suitable leopard habitat is situated in protected area, sixty eight percent (68%) of leopard habitat is currently outside of protected areas, and leopard conservation efforts should be focused on these areas, where leopards are most at risk.

- 2.5. In addition to habitat loss and fragmentation, key documented threats to leopards include: prey-based depletion; intense persecution and excessive off-takes (legal and illegal) of putative damage-causing animals (DCAs); poorly managed and unsustainable trophy hunting; the poaching and illegal trade in leopard skins for cultural and religious attire; incidental snaring; direct and indirect poisoning; retaliatory killings; poor capture techniques; and the injudicious and unethical radio-collaring of leopards for research and tourism with minimal oversight. An identified emerging threat involves an increase in ranching rare/expensive game, especially intensive breeding for trophies and colour variants. This impacts negatively on the leopard population through increased persecution or legal removal, exclusion with predator-proof fences, and limitation of gene flow. Although total habitat may be increasing with the advent of wildlife ranching, many ranchers persecute leopards as DCAs to protect valuable game species. Such suitable habitats thus become ecological traps (Swanepoel et al., 2016).

- 2.6. Nationally, monitoring of trophy hunting is limited to records of the numbers of leopards removed each year, and for legal DCAs off-take the numbers of permits awarded annually. There is little to no monitoring of illegal off-take of leopards. KwaZulu-Natal and Limpopo recently instituted frameworks that combine intensive and extensive monitoring to reliably track leopard population trends at a provincial scale, but elsewhere confidence in monitoring is low. In terms of the management and conservation of leopards in South Africa, some provinces adopted management plans that address particular aspects of leopard management (e.g. the Eastern and Western Cape have guidelines for the management of DCAs, while KwaZulu-Natal (Balme, et al., 2010b) and Mpumalanga have specific plans that guide the allocation of hunting quotas).
- 2.7. Best practice guidelines for leopard monitoring are currently being developed to encourage the private sector to participate in the South African Leopard Monitoring Project. The guidelines seeks to define the minimum standards to produce robust data to allow for the monitoring of leopard population status and distribution in South Africa. It seeks to define what different types of data can be used for, what the limitations of different data are, and how these data may be used to inform leopard management in South Africa.
- 2.8. In addition, the Minister of the Department of Forestry, Fisheries and the Environment appointed the High-Level Panel (HLP) which released a report in May 2021 that identified some gaps in relation to the conservation and management of leopard in South Africa. This report further recommended the need for the development of the national mechanisms and/or tools for the management and conservation of leopards that will provide standardized guidelines to government and the whole of society for the overall management and conservation of the species.
